

Let Art Talk was launched in 2007 as an innovative and unique way to address important issues facing Uganda and the global community. Communicating social, cultural, economic, and environmental challenges becomes less intimidating through the medium of art. The objective of the organization is to educate the diverse segments of society by using common terms and creative techniques in order to encourage constructive change for a positive future .

Led by internationally known Ugandan woodcut printmaker Fred Mutebi, the mission of Let Art Talk is to use art as an educational tool to empower people and communities at the grassroots level. The personal disciplines that art requires can be used in many areas of society. The goal is to transform lives by strengthening leadership, advocating reconciliation, and imparting problem solving skills.

Please consider becoming a partner with Let Art Talk to help communities in Uganda. We welcome the opportunity to speak to your church, school, organization, or gathering about how you can help . Together we can empower communities through art.

Let Art Talk Initiatives

► Exchange Programs

Let Art Talk hosts artists and students from different parts of Uganda. Through such exchanges, people will learn from each other. This will curb discrimination along cultural lines, therefore creating unity in diversity. During the exchange program, the visiting communities will be involved in the various activities of the host community. Let Art Talk also organizes trips for selected youths to visit other already organized exchange groups in other parts of Uganda.

► Talking Murals

Important topics are discussed in a public forum and then translated into words of the local language with corresponding themed pictures. Community members participate in the creation of the mural with their ideas, words, and artistic contributions.

► Workshops

Let Art Talk conducts art classes with students from underprivileged and struggling communities throughout Uganda. Various art methods are taught such as, linocut printing, painting, drawing, and tie-dyeing. The completed artwork is made available for sale to financially help the individual student and to fund the program.
